Apple released the second beta version of its next MacOS Catalina 10.15.2 to the test-purpose programmers. The last beta build arrives a week after the first beta release to the programmers and two weeks after the initial release of the MacOS Catalina 10.15.1 update to the public. If you're a programmer, you can install the last beta from the Apple Developer Center right now. Let's dive to see some more details about macOS Catalina 10.15.2 beta 2 and what it brings to the mix. Apple Seeds macOS Catalina Beta 2 for Developers for Test Fins If you are interested in installing the latest macOS Catalina 10.15.2 beta 2, you can download it through the Software Update engine. Just navigate to System Preferences and install it. However, note that the new construction can be downloaded after you have installed the appropriate configuration profile from the Development Center. At this time, it is still unclear what the new macOS Catalina 10.15.2 has to offer or if you gain some future-oriented addition. However, the update will most likely include bug fixes that have not been addressed in the last public release. In addition, it is certain that there will also be performance improvements for the overall user experience to be improved. There were also no major alterations in the first beta of macOS Catalina 10.15.2, so we suspect that there will be no major additions in the second beta. However, as always, we will update you as soon as something new is discovered. macOS Catalina itself was a great update since it brought a series of additions to the table. It eliminated support for 32-bit applications, iTunes was eliminated in favor of three new applications - Podcasts, TV applications, and Music. In addition, there was a new Find My application, along with a redesigned photo interface. If there are new additions in macOS Catalina 10.15.2 beta 2, we will definitely update theThis is all for now, friends.
