Grammar and Use of English Spoken and Written In connection with a great book like this, which has had about seven years of writing, many colleagues and other scholars have influenced our thinking and have directly or indirectly influenced the content and formulation of the grammar as it is published. Some names deserve a special expression of our gratitude.First of all we thank the Cambridge Reference Panel, whose names are listed in the previousWithout the input and inspiration of the panel, the book wouldn't have had much in terms of precision, organization and detail. In particular, we would like to thank Karin Aijmer, Franz Andres Morrissey, Susan Hunston, Marilyn Lewis, Keith Mitchell and Anne OäKeeffe for their in-depth and meticulously detailed reports on the various versions of the manuscript and their suggestions, always an improvement on our attempts at revision. Special thanks also go to Jean Hudson, who started out as our research assistant for the project and taught us a lot about corpora research, and who later became a member of the Cambridge Grammar Reference Panel in its early stages. Cambridge University Press has given us exceptional and unfailing support right from the start. First of all, thanks must go to Colin Hayes, ELT Group Director at the press from 1988 to 2003, whose vision and willingness to support this project actually launched the whole venture. It was Colin, together with Jeanne McCarten, to whom we also owe an enormous debt, who saw the significance of the developments in the linguistic corpus and their implications for the teaching of the English language and, consequently, was willing to make the commitment on behalf of the CUP for the construction of the CANCODE spoken corpus and the commissioning of this grammar.. In its final phase of development, we have enjoyed unparalleled support and commitment from Colin Hayes' successor, Andrew Gilfillan, and our commission editor, Alison Sharpe. Alison guided the project with great competence and provided us with inspiration, encouragement and good advice. The day-to-day management of the project was skilfully managed by Geraldine Mark, who brought to it her considerable experience as an English language teacher and ELT editor, along with a tireless instinct for how best to present grammar. By a small world coincidence, Michael McCarthy was first introduced to the intricacies and pleasures of English grammar as a schoolmate of Geraldine's father, Brian Mark, who taught English at Grammar College School in Saint Illtyd, Cardiff, when Michael was a student there. Brian Mark, as his daughter, deserves a special thank you. CUP also provided us with corporate and expert computational support from Patrick Gillard, Paul Heacock, Andrew Harley, Ann Fiddes and Dominic Glennon, all of whom we thank. In the final stages of preparing the bulky manuscript for publication, we had the privilege of having the editorial expertise, the vast experience and the eagle of ThÄ©rÄ'se Tobin to assist us; ThÄ©rÄ'se has made valuable suggestions to clarify our sometimes unclear statements. Linda Matthews guided the book through its final stages of production; she, too, deserves our thanks, as they do. Durkin and Alex Priestley for sales and marketing campaigns. Thanks are also to Linda Hardcastle for showing such an understanding of a long and complex book in compiling the index. An enormous amount. In addition to Jean Hudson, who worked as a researcher at the project in his early stages, we would like to thank in particular Svenja Adolphs, Julia Harrison and Jane Evison for their work in the development of the corpus spoken CANCODE and for their in-depth investigations on it. Without their support as co-researchers, we would have been overwhelmed by the pure and simple volume of data. Between university colleagues both authors shared over the years, some figures stand out for having deeply influenced us. John Sinclair was, and remains, the most important inspiration and mentor for both; his scholarship is unparalleled for originality, breadth and depth. He and other colleagues from the universities of Birmingham and Nottingham have academically shaped us in what we are today; Among these figures are Margaret Berry, David Brazil, Malcolm Coulthard, Michael Hoey and Walter Nash. David Lee Jenkins, David John Georges, John Paul Jones, John Paul Lee Mr. Richard, Mr. Martin, Mr. Martin, Mr.Thome, Elena Tognini-Bonelli, Geoff Tranter, Amy Tsui, Koen Van Landeghem, Elaine Vaughan, Mary Vaughn, Steve Walsh, Shih-Ping Wang, Martin Warren, Linda Waugh, Fiona Wheeler, Geoff Williams, Brent Wolter and XuelianXu. Too many others to mention them have inspired us with lecture documents and published works, and to all of them we owe a debt of gratitude. Which are the gaps that remain in the book, must rest entirely at our door.
