How to make your crush notice you online

No matter your age, the way to connect with a man in the “I think you’re hot and would be interested in going out with you” way is to flirt. It’s as true online as in person; flirtation isn’t about being a tease, it’s about showing your interest and curiosity – and piquing his. When I suggest that to the mature over-40 single women in my dating workshops and coaching programs, I can see them cringe. Most of these otherwise outgoing women have no idea how to flirt with men, nor do they want to. They consider it quite childish, bordering on classless. I have news for you: Here is what you get when you don’t flirt with nice men: a nice conversation. That’s it. You’re likely to stay in the dreaded friend zone. That means online you’ll never hear from him again, and offline he might ask you for lunch; but that’s all you’re going to get. But you’re not looking for a buddy, right? When you see a man you’re attracted to, you want to be seen as a W-o-m-a-n! You want to be seen as someone he could enjoy being with AND having sex with. Now don’t get all ruffled about the sex thing. Isn’t this just like you? When you’re attracted to someone you usually imagine hanging out with him, kissing him, holding his hand (that was me) and/or jumping into bed. Men are pretty much the same, though they may skip the other stuff and go straight for fantasizing about the sex! Here are four ways to flirt with flair and class – whether online or off – so you can get him to go past the conversation and ask you out again and again: 1. Compliment him. Have you ever noticed that we use compliments to connect with other women? “I love your purse!” “Your job sounds amazing!” “You crack me up!” Why don’t you do that with men? Granted, it takes a different approach, but everyone likes to be complimented. Men love to know that you consider them to be smart, capable, fascinating and funny. A sincere compliment in those areas will take you a huge step forward toward connection. (Ahem: note the word “sincere.”) You can tell him he has nice eyes, and he’ll appreciate it. But that won’t go so far as more substantive compliments. A confident, grownup good guy needs to hear more than you think he’s cute or you like his dog. Tell him you agree with something he says; ask his opinion; let him suggest a book or restaurant; tell him you appreciate his jokes or that his business sounds interesting. Tell him you want to know more about something he’s interested in. When you’re online, pick something that stands out to you that the other thousands of women may not. Saying you like his dog is what every woman says. Instead, tell him you think it’s cool that he’s an engineer and ask him what he likes to create. Men rarely receive compliments from women. When you do, you will stand out and he will take a second look. And if he doesn’t end up asking you out, at minimum you helped a nice guy feel good about himself. You do that for other women all the time, right? 2. Bare bits of your sweet soul! Write like you’re chatting with him. I recommend that my clients ask and answer this question out loud: What do I like about him and what do I want him to know about me? Then just have a little conversation with yourself. This helps you get the words out so you can communicate in a genuine and open way. When you write, let him know some real stuff about you. Share a funny or embarrassing thing that happened to you today. That tells him that you’re willing to be open and not take things too seriously. (Those are attractive qualities, don’t you think?) Tell him that you’re excited about taking your niece to the park and swinging on the swings with her. Tell him you’re studying French because you have dreams of going to Paris. Don’t make it only about your accomplishments and how perfect your life is. That’s not the stuff that forms bonds between people looking for love. 3. Show off, sister. This may be difficult for you; it is for many women. We aren’t used to talking about ourselves because we’ve been told it’s selfish and braggadocios. (Love that word!) Real ladies are humble and let the man shine, right? No. It’s nonsense. You’ve got to get over this if you want to help men get to know you. They want you to talk about yourself! (At least the good guys do.) He’s only going to know how fabulous you are – and if you’re a good match – if you get some of your shiny stuff out. Don’t be afraid to share your passions, interests, accomplishments, interesting life experiences and plans for the future. You will get attention and get dates by showing the confidence to tell him who you are. You will be memorable and may be just a bit enticing. A warning though: as my husband says: Men listen in headlines while women talk in stories! Don’t tell him long stories. Keep it brief, and if he’s a match for you, he will want more. Whether online or off, it’s important that you show real and revealing glimpses of who you are and what you care about. The right guy will be drawn to you, and the wrong guy won’t. Isn’t that perfect? 4. Show clear interest. A simple: “Nice talking to you” isn’t enough. Everyone says that, and it’s likely to be filed under the “she’s just being polite” category. Instead, add something to that. “It was nice talking to you, Bob. It would be nice to do it again.” That makes it clear that you’re open, and it shows that ever-attractive confidence. (You can apply this every step of the way: It was great to get your email, Bob. I look forward to continuing our conversation...and so on.) There’s a big difference between this and asking him out. After you deliver this line, stop! You have helped him feel safe and appreciated. He knows you will say yes if he asks. (Men really do appreciate this...just think of how many times they’ve heard “no” in their lives!) If he’s interested he will make a move. One last note: Remember that if he doesn’t go for your attempt, he probably knows something you don’t know about why you’re not a good match. (He wants someone taller, is obsessed with something you don’t like, sees his last horrible girlfriend in you, etc.) Don’t let it discourage you. You’ll get points in your dating karma bank by making him feel good about himself, and it will be easier to do it the next time with the guy who may be your perfect match. Don’t fall into the trap of thinking flirting is tacky or that you can’t be good at it. Flirting is definitely for mature daters; we just do it a little differently. Even if it doesn’t come naturally, there is hope! Use these techniques and enjoy the positive responses you get and the power it gives you. (Yes...I said POWER). I’m confident you’ll go from thinking of flirting as a necessary evil to looking forward to the next opportunity to strike up a connection and share yourself with a nice man! Life Style December 26, 20201019 views0 Approaching your crush is a somewhat confusing thing. On the other hand, it might seem like releasing all the hormones at one time. Doesn't it? So, before meeting in reality, you hope to approach your crush online. Though you always see your crush online but are you afraid to start chatting? So, you may be worried that you won't say the right thing at the right time. But now, there is no need to be a worry. Read this guide and flirt with your crush online, through social media. Today, many people show their existence through social media like Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, or any other social media. Actually, you can attract your crush on social media. In fact, social media is a great way to reach your crush in an indirect way. Though your crush isn't your Facebook friend or isn't following your social media, he still may see your posts or pictures through mutual friends. So, let's see some tips. Follow his/ her Social Media Account The very first thing you have to do to approach your crush through social media is following his/her social media account. In fact, when you are following them you can know about them well. But, if they have a few social media accounts, don't follow all of them. Just follow one of them, which has the most followers and the most active one. First, try to craft your social media presence to show you in the best possible light. Make sure that, your posts and pictures present you as a positive and interesting person to get his/her attention. Then you can introduce yourself to your crush through social media. Don't afraid to be the first one writing. Be polite and it is not a fault that you are starting to introduce yourself to your crush on social media. Update and Fix your Profile In order to get attention from your crush, you need to fix your profile. So, update your profile well. But remember don't post your selfie too much. Though selfies are a habit of many people lately, if you often post your selfie on your social media account, it might disturb your followers. Sometimes, over-posting your selfies will be a reason to lose your crush's interest in you because they consider as spam. So, update your profile, and delete useless posts if there available in your account. It will be a reason to get an impression from your crush. Be wise to your comment In fact, social media accounts are things that can reflect ourselves to the public. Most of the time, many people judge the characters through their social media accounts. So, if your crush also a person that judges people through their social media accounts, poor social media can ruin the impression of them. So, when you are commenting, think twice before it. You don't want to get a bad judge by your crush, right? So, Next to controlling your posts, you have to control your comments also. Whether it may be a comment that you write to your account either a reply comment that enters into your account. Always avoid commenting on something rude on your social media. Stop spamming As mentioned earlier, don't post too often to your or his/her social media. It may lead to your followers as well your crush will be considered as spamming. Not only that, it makes your crush feeling disturbed by yourself. Always remember your social media account reflect yourself to the public. So, if you want to get positive attention from your crush, please control yourself on social media. Use your mutual friends as an advantage Do you and your crush have mutual friends, then there are so many advantages. Especially if your mutual friends know well your crush. You can find well about your crush, through them. Actually, if your mutual friends can be a matchmaker between you and your crush, you are so lucky. If you are not a friend with your crush on social media, your mutual friends can be a chance to get your crush's attention. The other way to get the attention of your crush on social media, encourage your mutual friends to post you on their account, with no need to tell your mutual(s), why you are so eager for them to post. Post something you both like Instead of posting your selfies always to social media, you can post things that your crush likes. So, try to find out what things he/she prefers. For instance, if your crush is a music lover, you can post the band or singer that you both like. But how to find what he likes? How to find what your crush likes? First of all, you have to pay attention to him. Try to know about his/her hobby:, favorite food, favorite music, etc. Actually, it is a very good beginning for everyone who tries to get closer to someone. Most of the time, your crush may post his/her favorite things on their social media accounts. So, if you observe them well, you may able to find out the things your crush likes. Not only that, this will help you to avoid the topics that your crush doesn't like. Luckily if you have the same preferences, it won't be difficult to make chat material. Accordingly, this is how to approach your crush on social media. But, these are not enough. You may have to chat, in order to approach your crush on social media. With the following tips, it won't be difficult to make chat material. Have a fun and casual opening So, this is the time to chat and approach your crush through social media. When you do greet your crush, it is important to start the conversation on the right foot. It will be a help to spend more time talking with your crush. The key here is, to play cool, but not too cool. For instance, saying "how are you" or "what's up" is perfectly acceptable. But, remember, don't try too hard to impress your crush. You can start your conversation with an interesting story about something that happened to you, something you previously talking about, or something cool you just heard on the news. You just need to keep them short and don't try to impress too hard. Avoid always being the first one who says "Hi" first Actually, though you are going to impress and approach your crush, it is important to strike a balance in your relationship. You don't want to be the one who always sends the first message, because there might be a chance that your crush may not be all that eager to talk to you after all. It may be the case that your crush is just and likes it when you make all the moves. But, if this happens, it could be a sign of you take your relationship to the next level. Your crush will still expect you to do all the work. That could annoy really fast. Being playful when chatting through social media Once you get to know each other a little bit better, tease your crush. Teasing will be a great way to flirt with your crush. This will show you appreciate your crush's strangeness and that you don't take life too seriously. But, don't take your teasing too far. There is a difference between poking fun at someone and insulting him or her. Just try to show that you can tease too. He will be impressed about what's going on in his/ her life. But remember, don't pry. Just ask casually about his or her interests, friends, or even family. But, don't ask too many questions. Don't be too eager during your conversation Actually, it is great to show that you think your crush is an engaging, exciting, and fun person. But, if you overdo it you may end up looking too obsessive. So, avoid too many emotions. It can get annoying and will make you look immature. Another main fact is, if your crush doesn't reply right away, don't immediately follow up with a series of questions. It will make it look like your world rotates around your crush's answers. Keep your finish strong Finishing off your chat is also so important as much as the conversation goes on. Make sure to sign off at the right time. So, you leave your special someone wanting more. You should leave too soon but should say goodbye while things are still interesting. Just wait for an interesting conversation to start wrapping up, and say you have to go. Say one or more things about the relevant topic and then say goodbye. Actually, this will leave your crush wanting to talk to you more. And at the final of your conversation, don't forget to show that you had a great time talking to your crush. Let your crush know that you had fun chatting and that you are looking forward to talking again. Finally, ask your friends or your crush's friends if he or she is single. But, the most important thing is just to be yourself. Don't try too hard. So, this is how to get your crush's attention on social media and chatting through social media. It will work for you, and GOOD LUCK. Share
