Why this law firm example answer

Why does the commercial law? Responding to the question "Why the commercial law?" It is one that students end more. The reason why many people struggle when they try to respond is, most likely, thanks to its open nature; It seems there is an infinite number of ways you could approach the question! However, the truth is that the question is actually trying to ask you some very specific information, which will tell you happily now ... before diving into the main points, you must be aware that you could get a subtle change in the same question. For example, you may be asked why you are specifically interested in international commercial law or what makes you think you are particularly suitable for a career in commercial law. Fortunately, these variants can be answered again using the same processes that will be mentioned here. The only important exception to this is if you are asked why corporate law? "The corporate legislation slightly differs the commercial law as corporate law is to do with customer business relationships (eg mergers and acquisitions, restructuring, etc.) considering that the commercial law is all carried out by a study Legal in the city. So make sure your answers reflect that thin difference in the user! What is the commercial law? Before starting to write, you need to know what is meant by commercial law. If you don't know what it is, like Should you show that you are interested in pursuing a career in this area? Commercial law, as mentioned above, is any work that a law firm will do in the city and will generally involve work on contracts, trust, finance, banking, tax, etc. Moving a range of business offers as a lawyer, every completion between 1 and 6 months depending on the nature of the agreement. As a trainee your role will be to create the first one A draft documents, take two diligence, technical research problems and help you manage different aspects of transactions. Take a look at this article from Shearman & Sterling if you want to discover more information about what a typical trainee will do in a commercial law firm: "What are the trainee lawyers?" Why this question? You should also understand why this question is asked. What is why the recruiter is interested in discovering your interest in the commercial law? Only once you put it as the recruiter's clothes and he really understood the question if he starts writing. One of the key reasons is because legal enterprises invest a lot of time and money in individual training. They don't want to pay for your GDL / LPC (that many companies of city rights do!) Or waste hundreds of hours of partners time if you are not invested in their long term. So, this is predominantly a question about motivation. In other words, it is necessary to demonstrate that they have the ambition to pursue a legal career, a genuine passion for a legal career, and the focus to find out why their particular company interests you. 1. Your ambition for commercial law in answering this question is therefore crucial to show that you have the ambition to pursue a career in commercial law. A way you can do this is to demonstrate the range of legal experiences you've had in recent years that have confirmed your interest in the law. When you do, try to actually demonstrate specific actions that you have taken during your work experience and the results you have achieved, and how it would benefit in a commercial law environment. For example, instead of simply saying "I worked alongside the tax department and enjoyed the experience", immerse yourself in depth mentioning that "filled in one CT600 and obtained X, Yez for a customer ". When you talk about your experiences you are trying to demonstrate ambition and motivation for commercial law, and not only use it as an opportunity to name the fall of all interesting things that You did. 2. Dies your story most people when they answer this question give very generic answers, often simply simply The law website or law marketing material. For example, it is shocking how many candidates think they create a great answer to this question telling the recruiter who are "driven to work in a global law firm with hundreds of international offices and ambitious colleagues". This says absolutely nothing about why you want to work in commercial law; Just telling them that you are able to use copy & paste! Instead, you have to tell your story and be genuine. What was the thing that initially took you interest and brought you the legal route? The plan must be original! Spend a little time thinking about the initial trigger that puts you on this path and the different steps you have taken to get where you are today. By telling a compelling story about why the commercial law is your call is emotionally attractive to any recruiter and show them that are the next logical step in your career plan. Also, build as your skill set and the character corresponds to what they are looking for. In other words, you believe to think about the skills you expect from you (which you can find on any recruitment website of the graduate of any city plan) and prove you to have them. Once again, not only mention skills, but build a photo of how your extra-curricular interests and work experiences have allowed you to build the skills needed to be an excellent commercial lawyer. Some of the most original and effective answers are those that show how long lasting customer relationships have developed before and the results they have achieved for that customer! 3. Focus on them finally, the law firm wants you to demonstrate because you are interested in the commercial law from their point of view. This is perhaps the most difficult for students to realize, since the generic nature of the demand would suggest that requires a fairly generic response. However, at the end of the day, your task is to demonstrate that it is the correct solution for them and the best way to do it is to adapt the answer to them every time. That being said, this question does not ask you why you want to work in that particular law firm, then make sure you don't start answering the wrong question. Keep everything focused on "why commercial law?" The best way I find to do this is after demonstrating your general interest for the commercial law and the career path offers, highlights the ways in which their company can help you develop as a commercial lawyer. For example, it is possible to mention the structure of their training contract, their reputation in certain areas of practice, or their learning / mentoring opportunities in progress. By doing the correct search you can show why you want to pursue the commercial law, especially in their company! Responding to the question: step by step the first step is to think about your reason to pursue the commercial law. What was it initially hooked up? Write this down a piece of paper at the top of the page. Your work from there is to create a chain of events that led you to where you are today (ie sending this application to this legal company). For example, it could be that the initial hook was when you performed your website business at age 14 and had to create a contract for new customers and appreciate the detailed nature of work. You have therefore decided to get a work experience in a legal company to experiment how the contracts are built in that setting. This led you to discover a new charm in the way companies can save money by drawing up written contracts correctly so you have sought some work experience in banking activities / And so on until you reached this point today! This step is all about knowing where you are in the great scheme of things and ensuring the law firm you are looking at is the logical step of your next story. The second step is to combine skills. Write all the experiences you have had in the previous years (not read, read, paid, unpaid) and each give each A disqualification / competence developed. For example, your part-time job as a bartender could demonstrate teamwork. Once you have this list, find the skills you are applying to expect and circle the relevant correspond. You want to include these within your reply. Finally, follow the structure above: demonstrates your ambition for the commercial law, using your story to do what you say emotionally convincing, and don't forget to support your interest in the commercial law focusing on them. Conclusion You are more than likely that this question is asked at a certain point, whether it is on the application itself or in the interview, so it is very important to understand how to deal correctly. Students normally approach this question in a bland and boring way, so if you can inject a certain personality in your reply and provide unique information in why the commercial law is right for you then you are already on a winner! winner!
