How to verify your identity for unemployment michigan

En español If we couldn't verify your identity based on the information you gave us when you filed for unemployment, we will notify you that you will need to provide additional documentation and which specific method you must use to verify your identity. Complete this step in UI OnlineSM or respond to the Request for Identity Verification (DE 1326C) mailed to you. How Should You Verify Your Identity? Use the Document Upload feature in UI Online to verify your identity. If we need you to verify your identity, you will get a message asking you to: Visit your UI Online homepage and select Upload Identity Documents. You will only see this option if there has been an issue verifying your identity. You may also receive this request in the mail. Gather Your Documents For us to verify your identity, you must provide two documents: One photo identification document One other identity document View the list of acceptable documents for identity verification. Submission Deadline You have 10 calendar days from the Mail Date on the Request for Identity Verification (DE 1326C) mailed to you to respond with your proof of identity. To request more time, you must call 1-866-401-2849 or mail a request to the address at the top of the Request for Identity Verification (DE 1326C) mailed to you. We must receive your request within 10 calendars days of the Mail Date on the paper form. The deadline has passed to use ID.me to verify your identity. We will determine your eligibility for benefits based on the information available and mail you a Notice of Determination. If you are disqualified from receiving benefits, you have the right to appeal the decision within 30 days of the mailing date on your Notice of Determination. Visit Unemployment Insurance Appeals for more information on the process. Penalties If we do not receive your correct identification documents or a request for more time, or we are not able to verify your identity: You will not be eligible for benefits. You will receive a disqualification notice (Notice of Determination) in the mail. You will have to file an appeal to receive benefits for this claim. You may receive an additional request to verify your identity. Avoid Common Mistakes For faster processing and to avoid delays or penalties, make sure: Your information matches. Your name, date of birth, and Social Security number must match the information on file with the Social Security Administration (SSA) or the DMV. For example, you may have changed your name but didn't notify the DMV. You submit the correct documentation. You must provide documents with your correct name or date of birth, such as an official birth certificate or marriage certificate. Note: We will not update your information with the SSA, the DMV, or your employer. Contact them directly to make changes. Additional Resources (WSYM) — We have heard from thousands of people through the pandemic who have struggled to get the unemployment benefits they are entitled to.Starting on June 30, they will have an opportunity to try to get help in person (click here to make an appointment).Related:But is that enough to solve their problems?The state closed unemployment insurance agency offices due to COVID-19 as pandemic filings for benefits skyrocketed. Even now over the last week, the state unemployment insurance agency says it handled an average of more than 23,000 calls per day.One of those callers was Tiffany Voisin."Unemployment feels like this never-ending loop," said Voisin. She said after she was hospitalized with COVID and missed work, she lost her job. Voisin filed for unemployment and received benefits for 9 weeks. Then the benefits were cut off.She said she was told she needed to re-submit identity verification paperwork, which she did on May 12."That they have it and it is in the final stages of being processed. That is what I am told every time I call," she said.Voisin said she's applied to 100 jobs since March. And this isn't just impacting her. She is a mom to two little girls. "My lights have been close to being shut off for the last 2 months," said Voisin. Rachael Kohl is Director of the Michigan United Workers Rights Center. She said before the pandemic she got about 20 calls a week from people asking for help with unemployment benefits. Now it is in the hundreds."Just for context, unemployment has been an issue since before the pandemic," said Kohl. She said she hopes that this is an opportunity to fix issues. One of the problems, she said, is that the agency is over legislated. Not only is it forced to take numerous steps that slow down its ability to help people, laws ban many people from getting benefits in Michigan, who in other states would be eligible."The Michigan legislature has created one of the most restrictive laws in the entire country," said Kohl. While there have been some temporary changes due to federal pandemic benefits, when it comes to state benefits, many people apply who do not qualify.People who retired from one job then took another do not qualify if they lose that job.People who quit a job recently and then took another do not qualify for benefits if they lose the new job.Part time workers do not qualify, even if they work full time hours at multiple jobs.We basically have a security net with gaping holes in it that many people fall through."Maybe the legislature has intended to cut out about 75% of Michigan's workforce, and that is actually what it is. It's about 75% of unemployed workers in Michigan will not be able to get unemployment benefits," said Kohl. There are some bills proposed in Lansing (read full bills below) that would expand eligibility temporarily due to the pandemic, or try to make the website less confusing.Voisin said she feels there is a stigma associated with needing unemployment.She fears that prevents changes from happening to make it easier for people to get the benefits they are entitled to receive. "You're messing with people's livelihood, You're messing with my ability to take care of my kids," she said. 2021-HIB-4655 by WXYZ-TV Channel 7 Detroit on Scribd 2021-HIB-5092 by WXYZ-TV Channel 7 Detroit on Scribd 2021-SIB-0533 by WXYZ-TV Channel 7 Detroit on Scribd About 100,000 likely fraudulent unemployment claims have been filed in Michigan since Friday, Michigan's Unemployment Insurance Agency said Wednesday.Those claims, which were for the federal program called Pandemic Unemployment Assistance (PUA), were stopped for identity verification and not issued payments, the agency said. Claims are filed using previously stolen or fraudulent personal information, and no personal data from claimants has been stolen."Because of the additional fraud protections we developed last year at the onset of these coordinated attacks on state unemployment agencies, these fraudulent claims have been stopped and no payments have been sent," Liza Estlund Olson, acting director of the agency, said in a news release.It's been nearly a year since the U.S. Secret Service warned consumers of a Nigerian crime ring that was filing fraudulent jobless claims across the country. Fraudulent claims continue to plague the state agency, ultimately slowing benefits to legitimate filers.At that point, the agency had relaxed certain fraud protection policies in order to speed up the delivery of benefits for the millions of Michigan residents who were out of work at the start of the pandemic.It's estimated that "hundreds of millions" of mostly federal dollars were sent to criminals, according to an estimate from Deloitte & Touche LLP and the agency, before those fraud policies were reinstated.At recent hearings in front of Michigan lawmakers, Olson has detailed some of the tactics fraudsters have used to try to claim benefits, including calling legislative offices posing as a real person to get a lawmaker's help in obtaining benefits, and even submitting a fake ID with a photo of John Krasinski, known for his role as Jim Halpert in "The Office."More: Michigan unemployment claims drop to the lowest level since the start of the pandemicMore: Judge: Companies can be sued over Michigan unemployment fraud fiascoThe agency also released guidelines on what to do if someone receives a letter from the UIA asking to verify the claimant's identity or a "Monetary Determination" letter and they did not file for benefits.The agency said the person may be the victim of identity theft, and should visit Michigan.gov/UIA and click on "Report Fraud or Identity Theft" to alert the agency.Once the identity theft has been reported and the investigation is concluded, the victim will be sent a null and void determination letter, the agency said.Contact Adrienne Roberts: amroberts@freepress.com. For your protection, Iowa Workforce Development (IWD) uses data provided by LexisNexis® Risk Solutions to help verify and validate your identity. Such data may include public records from federal, state and local government sources, and/or non-public data from government, utility, or education sources. LexisNexis® may also use limited information from credit reporting bureaus, but no credit check is conducted and no inquiry of any kind is incurred.
